

- ① tone/style
- ② myth = garden
- ③ character

lst ¶ - Mature <sup>shares ideas</sup>

- reason
- sexually - Rabelais - <sup>Bergson & Proust</sup>
- class
- religion? (depends on the translation)

style - ironic
- exaggeration
- humorous
- allusive

Travels from New World to Surinam
Europe the New World

- village
- sexuality
- class

With a tone such as this (sarcastic, humorous) can you trust the narrator the character?

~~Why~~ travel everywhere

all are tainted

Pagan New World

Christian Europe

Turkey Muslims

innocence
↓

CHAPTER I

How Candide was brought up in a beautiful country house, and how he was driven away <sup>satire on nature worship</sup>

THERE lived in Westphalia, at the country seat of Baron Thunder-ten-tronckh, a young lad blessed by nature with the most agreeable manners. You could read his character in his face. He combined sound judgment with unaffected simplicity; and that, I suppose, was why he was called Candide. The old family servants suspected that he was the son of the Baron's sister by a worthy gentleman of that neighbourhood, whom the young lady would never agree to marry because he could only claim seventy-one quarters, the rest of his family tree having suffered from the ravages of time.

<sup>irony</sup> The Baron was one of the most influential noblemen in Westphalia, for his house had a door and several windows and his hall was actually draped with tapestry. Every dog in the courtyard was pressed into service when he went hunting, and his grooms acted as whips. The village curate was his private chaplain. They all called him Your Lordship, and laughed at his jokes.

The Baroness, whose weight of about twenty-five stone made her a person of great importance, entertained with a dignity which won her still more respect. Her daughter, Cunégonde, was a buxom girl of seventeen with a fresh, rosy complexion; altogether seductive. The Baron's son was in every way worthy of his father. His tutor, Pangloss, was the recognised authority in the household on all

all words - all mouth

Irony he has no judgment

if it's true how per. do the others read of his own doesn't have his own chapel minister